CENTURY STANDS™

These popular stands are available in many different configurations, lengths and finishes. The unique staggered leg design allows C Stands to be nested and therefore be placed extremely close to one another on a set. The lower leg can also be slid under many objects. In the case of the Sliding Leg C Stands, the top leg will slide on the main riser tube, allowing its use on stairs, off curbs and even as high as placing that leg on a counter top or desk. The C+ offers a removable base for both the 20" and 40" risers. This allows disassembly for easy travel. Completely re-engineered for 2005. Patents applied for and pending. Brand new semi-spring loaded leg mechanism design. Both lower legs are held securely in position, while the top leg is adjustable without the otherwise cumbersome, awkward design used by other manufacturers. Fast, easy opening and closing. Both 20" and 40" models are equipped with the sliding leg and come complete with head and arm. This is the newest, most innovative design for C Stands in 30 years!

The History of C-Stands™

Century Stands or "C" stands are an important component in the image makers arsenal of tools. The term "Century Stand" goes back to the early days of motion picture production. Before there was artificial lighting the stages would revolve to allow for continuous overhead lighting from the sun. Large reflectors would be positioned to bounce or kick the overhead light up onto the stage and illuminate the set and actors. These reflectors were made in many sizes but it seems the most popular was the 100 inch or "century" sized reflector. In later years studios, grips and gaffers began to manufacture the earliest versions of what we now call C-Stands. The original C-Stands had welded bases that did not fold up nor did they adjust but the fact that they easily nested together made them invaluable on the stage.

In 1974 Matthews Studio Equipment introduced the industry's first folding base C-Stand. C-Stand and Century Stand are registered trademarks of Matthews Studio Equipment. Matthews now produces a wide range of C Stands and related accessories to assist the motion picture, television and photographic professional in lighting and lighting modification support.
